Living with FASD

A foster mother says the community desperately needs more services for people suffering from fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. She has been raising a child suffering from the disorder since he was a baby. The boy is now nine and she is worried about the kind of life he'll have as an adult. To date there is nothing specific to FASD for assisted living; they need different school programs, need to learn hands on skill. They need more help and support. Many teens and adults are also suffering from this disability "Their judgmentproblem solving ability, foresightgoes out the window. These people will commit the same offence, over and over again, despite the consequences"

We, at FASS, advocate on behalf of all persons with FASD and their families

.FASS Mission Statement

To advocate on behalf of persons with FASD and their families throughout their lifespan

"To Save a Child, Is to save a Community"
