LIVING WITH FASD

As Experienced by a Person With FASD (from hopefasd.blogspot)
I watch a movie and hear the chatter, I may get the big picture. I rarely hear details
My family watches a movie and they understand all the fine print. I guess you could say I'm lucky if I get the main ideas of the story
When in a group of people, I hear random words. This happens a lot at school
Sometimes I can put them together enough to understand what they are saying, but lots of times I need it explained to me. If not, I spend my time looking as if I know what they are talking about or "zoning out"
I zone out a lot because the world is just too busy and it's way too hard for me to take it all in. Zoning is my way of balancing out the craziness around me.
When I experience change, I get uneasy – it may take a couple of weeks to adjust to a new routine. I am constantly in overload mode.

I may even be part of your family circle – Will you show compassion????
Your comments, questions and stories are welcomed
